

-----GENERALNEWS-----

Hi All

First some info for all the people who use Bandcamp as a music source!!

As we are in the process of uploading most of the Groove catalog on Bandcamp we now run into a problem (although is it a problem!!)
Bandcamp announces these as NEW releases but they are of course NOT new !, some are 25 years old but now for the first time on Bandcamp. We clearly put with each release the original release year so please!! check that.

As we now have 1 customer that has bought 2 albums that he already owned, (because he thought they were new) we now run into the problem that through Bandcamp it's nearly impossible to refund orders and we also are unable to check these claims!! We offered him a good solution for his problem but to make sure we don't have this more often, we ask you to:

Please check if you have the releases that are announced as new by Bandcamp already!! Because many are far from new and have been available through Groove and other sources for years (not all but many!!)

BANDCAMP!

The new Thorsten Quaeschning - Munich Session is in and it is fantastic!! I was already a big fan of him with his work in TD and with Ulrich Schnauss. And of course his great work as Picture Palace Music! This The Munich Sessions is another feather in his cap.

If you like multi sequencing and rhythmic layering in the best form available then this CD is for you. I played 10 minutes in Dreamscape radio check that out!!

gr-267 Spyra - InSPYRAtion

The story, the evolution of Spyra shows that the German musician likes to keep his audience on the alert. The one who has long been nicknamed the Klaus Schulze of the new decade likes to spread his know-how by visiting all areas of the EM, from Berlin School to ambient music, via EDM and even a little tour of pastoral music. And each album provokes reflection but ends up filling the fans of EM. The question is when, and after how much? Even the sublime Dunst didn't charm at first listen. In 2017, Spyra concocted a strange album, not to say enigmatic, with the participations of Mani Neumeier, Konstantin Athanasiadis and Roksana Vikaluk. Requiem - Eine Musik Für Den Herrenabend took us to dark music territories with a pastoral vision that limited the explorations and improvisations of a more typical EM of the Berlin School. Even without these dimensions, the music of this album commanded a few listenings before assimilating it well and falling under its austere charms. It must be said that the boiling Lux Aeterna, present on this album, had all the tools to bring us to a musical summit which our senses badly needed. It was at these moments that the musical union between Spyra and Roksana Vikaluk was consumed. InSPYRAtion is a recording of a concert given by Der Spyra and Roksana at a music festival in Solingen, Germany. And it is miles away from this album with a much more energetic music with a more Berlin School vision. But when, and after how many listenings ...

It's with a big crash of reverberations that Zeitstaub envelops our ears. Lines escape from this sound nucleus, including a luminous approach that shimmers like limpid water and makes its sonic lappings sound in a singing symphony of prism. A more reverberant line puts down this slight tumult, Zeitstaub embraces then a more ethereal phase with the voice of Roksana whose celestial murmurs come into conflict with the synth pads scented of Vangelis' floating orchestrations. The voice is high, and the armor of the synth is the opposite. Both approaches deviate to another phase of Zeitstaub which remains immured in cryptic atmospheres. The first frame of rhythm is born of a fountain of rattling with a line of sequences that goes up and down by adjusting its course with the velocity of the sequencer and its circular structure. Synth layers, quite angelic, wrap up warmly this movement that our ears will forget a few minutes later. Already, another line of the sequencer embraces this movement while the synth pads become denser, as more musical too. This line waddles, amplifying the polyphase form that Zeitstaub will unfold for its next 20 minutes. This structure, that goes up and down on a stream of sequences is still active in the scenery, amasses various effects and other sequences whose incomplete forms give a more variegated polish at this pace which will be the main arena between the synth, and its ghostly solos, and Roksana's voice and its interstellar Diva murmurs. In this regard, I wrote in the Requiem review that this duo would probably be more daring than the Schulze & Gerrard tandem because of the more progressive vision of Spyra. And this Zeitstaub confirms these writings. The stream that has embellished its decor sparkles in the opening of Flying Thoughts, as well as this oneiric movement of the sequencer. The rhythm becomes light with a spasmodic spheroidal form where chimes start to dance, like these giant figurines animated by blowers. A piano puts down slightly its notes in this seraphic decoration which bears the signature of Spyra. These notes wander aimlessly while the sequenced ritornello keeps the charms, and interest in my ears, up until a big vacuum is swallowing this duel around the 7th minute. From then on, Flying Thoughts plunges into a jumble of tones and effects. Little steps run everywhere, the sequenced rhythm line is clearly in survival mode while the piano extends its gibberish in a 2nd part where the improvisation really eats the inspiration. Despite some harmonic gleams, this section is the most difficult of InSPYRAtion. Lux Aeterna is as energetic as on Requiem. This mixture of EDM and of a concerto for distressed voices overflows towards Aerial Vox, a solid title that changes skin, like a musical snake and its mutations. Its intro proposes a piano, definitely more musical, which is joined by a luminous keyboard and its bluish glass arpeggios. Percussions effects trace a Lounge genre while misty haze gives a Berlin School-style nebulosity. The rhythm comes alive to become an up-tempo that is not quite mature and is rather in the psybient style before embracing a phase of dance music, in the Spyra style, with very good synth solos. The finale becomes toxic and leads to a purer Electronica with Roksana singing in an Electro-Orient style. The pace is quiet to reach an ethereal finale that decrees the end of a concert whose last 2 titles will make forget the first two, which in turn, will become those titles that will lead us joyfully to the second part of the most catchy InSPYRAtion.

So, when and after how many plays I have enjoyed this latest Spyra album? Aside from the 2nd part of Flying Thoughts, it was done pretty fast ... But to finish, and for an album in concert, that remains another very good album of Spyra. Hard to survive to Dunst! Sylvain Lupari (July 2nd, 2019)

One of the reasons is that because of you our costumers we can keep these prices so low. With over 1500 parcels shipped last year we can stay in the lowest shipping prices!

I am glad we are one of the few suppliers of EM that did not have to raise their shipping prices. So for the 4rth year in a row they stay the same!!
